

Khutso's Strange Dream

Author: Rahab Makotla Mudau
Illustrator: Siyasanga Madyibi

Khutso was having a dream. In this dream, he was eating cake.

He heard his grandmother calling him.

Grandmother sent Khutso to buy sugar.

On his way home,
the bag of sugar
started leaking.

Khutso had never tasted sugar before. It tasted very good,
even better than candy.

His grandmother hid the sugar under the bed.

Khutso was watching and saw where she hid it.

The next day, Khutso called all of his friends. He poured a few grains of sugar into each of their hands.

He poured the rest of the sugar into his own mouth. Then he put the empty bag back under the bed.

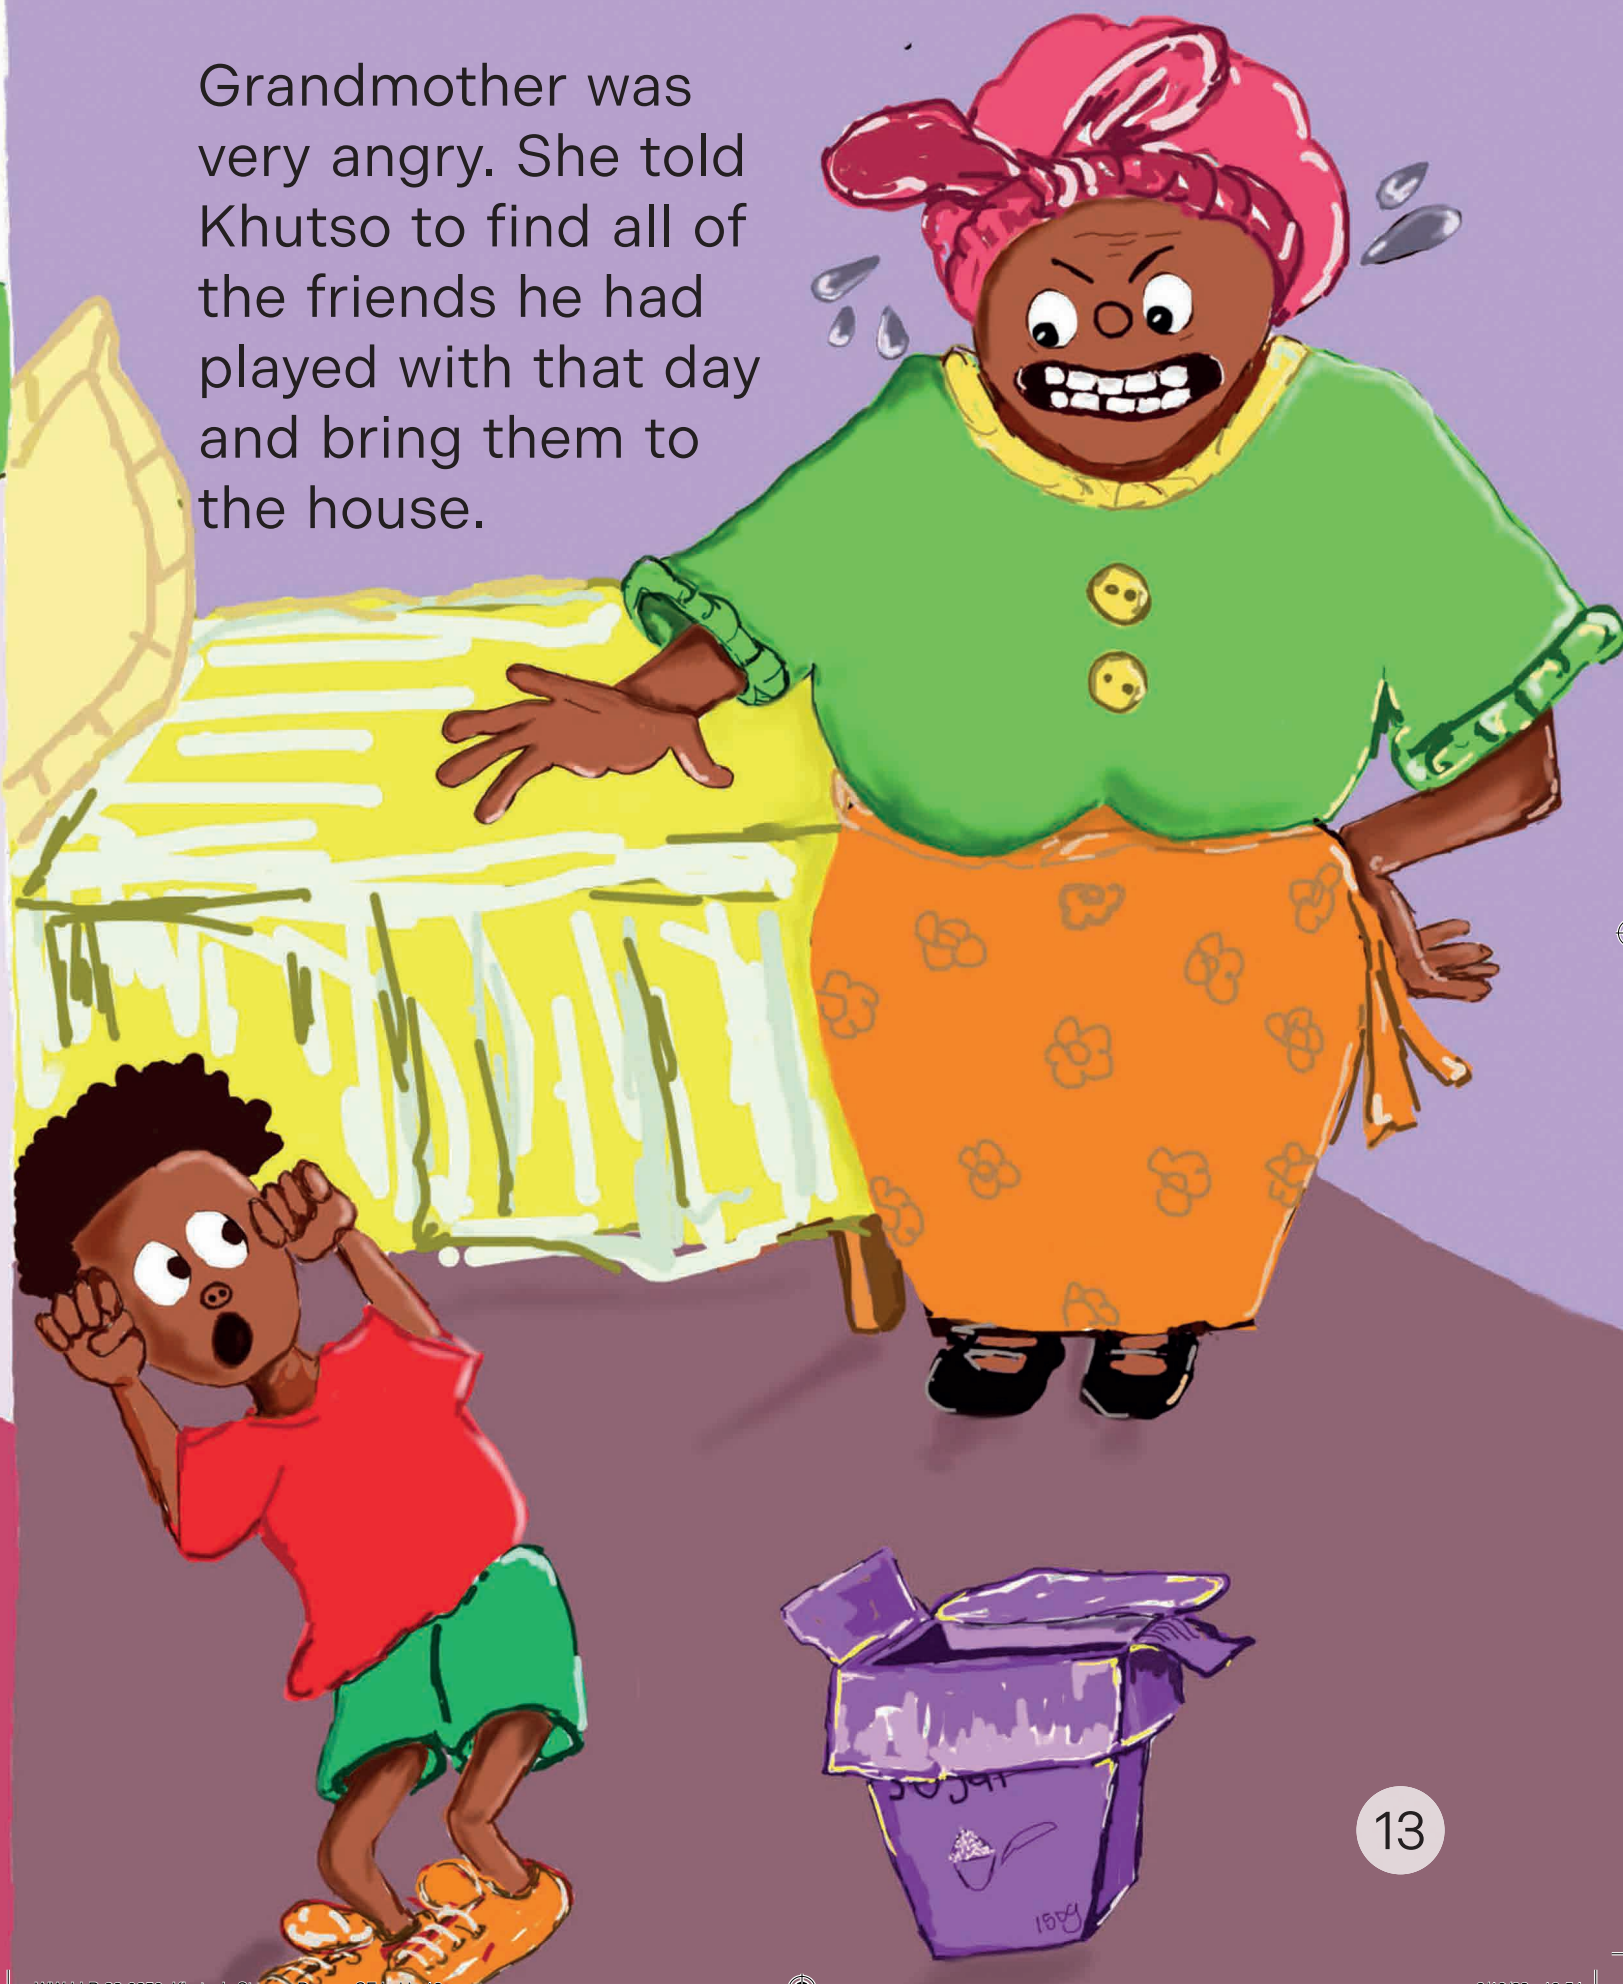

When his grandmother
wanted to use sugar, she went to her hiding place.
Her sugar was not there.

Grandmother was very angry. She told Khutso to find all of the friends he had played with that day and bring them to the house.

She asked them
who ate her sugar. Nobody answered.

Grandmother asked Khutso again and again. Each time he lied, his tongue grew longer.

Khutso was very scared. He ran away from his grandmother and his friends.

There was a loud bang.

Khutso woke up very scared.

It was just a dream! The sugar was still under the bed.

